EWSOLUTIONS PARTNERS WITH COMMUNITY COLLEGE TO REGAIN CONTROL OF DATA

HINSDALE, IL September 17, 2009 -- Community colleges, like thousands of industries worldwide, have undergone massive transformations. Surges in student populations have increased the burden of administrators and faculty to manage the complex data that results from enrollment and from trying to integrate existing and emerging technologies. Often, the result is poorly defined and organized data that threatens to undermine the management of these institutions.

Only 2 percent of community colleges have fully regained control of their data. New Jersey's Gloucester County College (GCC) was no exception. In 2004, GCC reached out to Enterprise Warehousing Solutions (EWSolutions), the industry leader in data and meta data solutions.

"It's all about the data," said Katherine Boswell, director of the Center of Community College Policy at the Education Commission of the States, as she addressed national trends about community colleges. "As increasing amounts of data flow within and between organizations, the problems that can result from poor data management practices are becoming more apparent."

EWSolutions expertly guided GCC in vendor management, technology planning, technology governance and business intelligence readiness. The result? The college has a strategic advantage over its competition—something every business owner desires, no matter the industry. Visit www.EWSolutions.com to read this entire case study.
